
Doctor Gorpon ™&©1991 Marc Hansen

Monsters Beware!

Fans of the lunatic antics of Ralph Snart Adventures will be pleased to learn that creator Marc Hansen is back with an all new three issue limited-series, Doctor Gorpon, for Eternity in June. According to Eternity, when a pair of heavy metal punks start swiping lyrics from a satanic spell book, the accidentally summon up a second-level demigod. Dr. Gorpon comes to the rescue, but will he rebuild his Gorpon Mobile in time to save the city from the hell-spawned, man-eating demon? To make matters worse, the local authorities think it was Dr. Gorpon who is responsible the beast in the first place.

Doctor Gorpon will ship in June, written and illustrated by Marc Hansen and will be priced at $2.50.

The Web Connects the Impact Line

DC's Impact Comics line has been created as a carefully interwoven, continuity-conscious universe in which a small number of heroes and villains operate. But in the Impact universe, there is one concept that pulls the line together: The Web.

The public thinks of the Web as an armored hero who has been fighting crime off and on for the better part of forty years. What they don't realize, though, is that there isn't just one Web; the Web is actually a number of men working as agents of a super-secret government organization. Equipped with high-tech weaponry and equipment, the Web's primary purpose was to gather information on superpowered crimefighters. When the crimefighters disappeared years ago, the Web's purpose disappeared with it, and the team was all but disbanded. Now there are new crimefighters--and the Web has a new reason to exist.

The Web's membership consists of "old-timers" who remember the earlier heroes and young turks who have a very different perspective on the world. In spite of their differences, though, the team must work together to watch over the new heroes--and to find out what happened to the original heroes...

The Web will not only appear in their own monthly comic, but will also show up in the pages of the other Impact titles. The Impact Comics Who's Who series (set to debut at the same time as The Web #1) will give fans more information about the Web and its operatives.

The Web is written by Len Strazewski and illustrated by Tom Artis and Bill Wray. The first issue is scheduled for July 18th release.

Eclipse A-Quiver With Excitement Over Robin Hood Debut

Robin Hood, Prince of Thieves is ready to challenge Rocketeer for cinematic hero of the year this summer--and several publishers are convinced that the renewed interest in Robin Hood is going to spread from the theater to the comic shop. Even Eclipse Comics, a company that generally prefers prestige-format books or trade paperbacks over comic books, is readying its own Robin Hood three-issue comic book miniseries for summer release--and they've called on the impressive talents of Timothy Truman to help visualize the familiar tals of everyone's favorite robber-hero.

Robin Hood: Book One, a 32-page full-color comic book featuring layouts by Timothy Truman and finished art by Christopher Schenck, is scheduled for mid-June release (which means that it should be on comic shop racks at about the same time the Kevin Costner film is released). Writer Valarie Jones has drawn on every Robin Hood source available to create her comprehensive tale of Robin Hood's adventures in Twelfth Century England. All the characters known to Robin Hood fans will be represented, including Friar Tuck, Little John, Will Scarlet, Maid Marian, the Sheriff of Nottingham, and of course, King Richard the Lion-Hearted.

"I've written this as a rip-roaring action adventure," Jones said, "and think it is important to get someone on layouts who has a real flair for the dramatic. No one currently drawing in the adventure genre can match Tim Truman. The great think is that his storytelling style meshes perfectly with Chris Schenck's watercolors."

Truman said, "I'm the preliminary designer. If this was a film, I'd be the storyboard artist and Chris would be the cinematographer. I suggest moods, angles, and story flow for Chris to expand upon as he will. It's a very neat collaboriatve process. Valarie gives the story its romance, I give it pace, and Chris brings the whole thing to vivid life."

Christopher Schenck, the color finishing artist on this series, may not be a familiar name to comic book fans, but his work is probably quite familiar indeed; Schenck was the colorist on Impel's mega-hit Marvel Universe Trading Cards series. He is painting the entire Robin Hood series in brilliant, lush watercolor.

"This version of Robin Hood, while firmly rooted in the legends as we know them, is historically accurate to 12th Century England," Jones said. "This is not an adaptation, because with so many legends to draw on , no one version is the 'true' story of Robin Hood. It's more like a big crazy quilt, stitched together from pieces of the Robin Hood mythos."

Robin Hood: Book One, a June release, is priced at $2.50. The comic book does not actually tell the same story as the Robin Hood, Prince of Thieves film; in fact, Jones points out that many of the plot elements in the film take place after the events of her Robin Hood series, making Robin Hood a sort of prequel to the film.

New Life For Death Hawk

"He's got a beautiful girl in one hand, a really big gun in the other, and an intelligent blob of goo for a best friend."

So who was ace artist Adam Hughes describing? None other than Death Hawk, the offbeat science fiction series that was Hughes' first full-length professional illustration work. Of course, Hughes subsequently moved on to Maze Agency, then to Justice League America, where he has become one of the most popular artists working today.

But whatever happened to Death Hawk?

Well, another well-known artist, Rik Levins, came in to finish up the next three issues of Death Hawk for Adventure Publications--but ironically, that fourth issue never appeared, because Adventure Publications ceased independent operation before the book could be released. When an arrangement was made to continue the Adventure imprint under Malibu Graphics' ægis, Death Hawk fell by the wayside.

Death Hawk ™&© 1990 Millennium

But it certainly wasn't forgotten. Creator/writer Mark Ellis realized that there was a strong fan following for this series. "It was a bit strange," Ellis said about Death Hawk's original appearance as a back-up feature in Star Rangers. "The response to this throwaway character outstripped the fan reaction to the title feature....after Millennium Comics was formed, we conducted retailer/reader surveys at conventions, and Death Hawk scored surprisingly high."

Even critical response to the series was quite strong. Amazing Heroes said, "Rollicking adventures? You bet! Sleazy and gritty? Once again, you bet! Fun? In spades!...well-written, well-drawn, violent, funny and entertaining..."

So is it any surprise to anyone that the rumors of Death Hawk's demise have been greatly exaggerated? The Adventure Comics series may be dead, but the character is quite alive--and fans will be able to see that for themselves when Death Hawk returns in Millennium Showcase #1 this May.

Death Hawk is a grim hero with a sense of humor--and that, according to Ellis, is the difference. "Super-tough, super-competent killer heroes like The Punisher don't appeal to me," Ellis said. "I made him something of a bungler, along the lines of the Kurt Russell character in Big Trouble In Little China. His touch act is mainly a surface bluff."

Death Hawk is an iconoclast and a nonconformist. In a future in which everyone fills a pre-set role, Death Hawk refuses to try to fit in; he remains an outcast, and he's proud of it. Along with his protoplasmic partner Cyke, he drifts from one adventure to another.

Oddly enough, Cyke ended up becoming a much more popular character than anyone initially envisioned. "Though Cyke is an artificial life form, he (it?) functions like a bad-tempered Jiminy Cricket. Cyke is far better educated than Death Hawk, and since he's telepathic, there can be no secrets between them. But that doesn't keep them from having a Calvin-and-Hobbes kind of relationship.... He (it?) was very popular... it was his superior attitude towards Death Hawk that got the most response," Ellis said.

Both Death Hawk and Cyke return to action in "The Land of the Deadly Sun," the full-length full-color story that makes up the premiere issue of Millennium Showcase. The story takes Death Hawk and Cyke into a deep-space installation manned by a group of interstellar samurai known as The Tigers of Heaven. For readers who either aren't familiar with or don't remember Death Hawk's earlier appearances, there will be eight pages of recap material pencilled by Darryl Banks.

Millennium Showcase #1: Death Hawk is written by Mark Ellis and illustrated by Rik Levins. Future issues of Millennium Showcase, featuring other characters and concepts under consideration for series publication, will appear on a quarterly basis. Each issue of Millennium Showcase is priced at $2.50

Modala Operandi

It's not uncommon for a miniseries to have a sequel--but it is uncommon for the sequel to appear a scant two weeks after the first miniseries ends! That's just what's happening with Star Trek The Next Generation: The Modala Imperative, a sequel to Star Trek: The Modala Imperative (already announced in CSN). In the first limited series, Kirk and his crew have to deal with the problems of the Modala, who have somehow acquired very advanced alien weaponry. In Star Trek The Next Generation: The Modala Imperative, set a century after the first series, Picard makes the unexpected discovery that the Ferengi bought Modala, complete with its technology, a century ago, and are now coming to claim their planet. According to DC, this new limited series will mark the first time the 24th Century crew of the U.S.S. Enterprise unites with Star Trek's Mr. Spock and Dr. McCoy--and that's a team-up to look forward to! Peter David, longtime writer of the Star Trek comic book and currently a New York Times best-selling author for his novel Vendetta, is writing the second miniseries, which is illustrated by Pablo Marcos. Adam Hughes supplies the covers. Look for Star Trek the Next Generation: The Modala Imperative #1 on August 1st.

Lester Girls Finds Ready For Epic Adventure

The Trouble With Girls, the fan-favorite Will Jacobs-Gerard Jones series about an adventurous secret agent who yearns for the mundane life, makes a move to Epic Comics later this year, according to current publisher Eternity Comics. Eternity reports that Epic will take over publication of the series, and that they will team writers Jacobs and Jones with artist Jackson Guice when The Trouble With Girls becomes an ongoing Epic series. (Gerard Jones is also the writer for Marvel's upcoming Wonder Man title and for DC's Green Lantern.)

Return of the Jedi

What a banner year 1991 has been for Star Wars fans! First comes the news that Lucasfilms does indeed plan to begin production on new Star Wars films, and that preproduction has already begun. Then comes the news that Timothy Zahn is the author who's been tagged to write the new Star Wars novels based on the films. And now Dark Horse Comics has announced that they have reached an agreement to produce Star Wars comics; the Star Wars series will join their successful Indiana Jones title done in conjunction with Lucasfilms, as well as their other licensed film-related titles (Aliens, Predator, Terminator, and the upcoming Thing). Dark Horse has not announced the creative staff for the new Star Wars books; as soon as that decision is made, you'll see it in CSN.

Crying Freeman Has a Colorful Future

Thus far, fans have had to enjoy Crying Freeman's colorful adventures in black-and-white. Beginning late this month, however, Crying Freeman's exploits will be available in full color when Crying Freeman Book Three #1 debuts.

"Crying Freeman Part Three contains all the elements that made the first two runs so successful," editor Satoru Fujii said. "Good characters, well-plotted stories, great action, and the incomparable artwork of Ryoichi Ikegami." The series will also bring back Freeman's first foe as well as introducing a new villain. Each 40-page full-color issue in the ten-issue limited series will be priced at $4.95.

Five Different Editions--Or Five First Editions?

When X-Men #1 begins its juggernaut march to the head of the comic book sales charts on August 15th, it'll be a truly unique event: Marvel is offering four standard-format editions of the comic book, one each week for four weeks, each with a different cover and different pin-up pages inside (all courtesy of fan-favorite artist Jim Lee). On the fifth week (the same week X-Men #2 ships) Marvel is offering a Marvel-Fanfare-format fifth X-Men #1 that will feature a double-gatefold cover featuring the art from all four earlier covers plus all the pin-ups. Now, are these five different editions, or are they simply a first edition and four different printings? Well, according to Marvel's Steve Saffel, "Fans should really think of this as five different first editions, even though they won't be out at the same time." Marvel isn't calling them second, third, or fourth printings; instead, they're designated as X-Men #1A, #1B, #1C, and #1D, followed by the deluxe-format version of the title. Marvel's Skip Dietz also warns that Marvel isn't doing overprintings of the deluxe edition--so if you want to be sure you get every edition, you might want to talk to the folks at your local comic shop now and reserve a copy! This landmark issue will feature Magneto's return to his status as a major villain once again--and he has three new followers, known as the Acolytes, encouraging him to reach all new levels of malevolence!

The Demon's Loco For Lobo

It's beginning to look like Lobo's a regular cast member of the Demon: he guest stars in Demon #15, marking the fifth issue in a row to feature this ever-popular hero. This issue, which is the finale to the "Apocalypse Now!" storyline, has Lobo and Demon battling for the control of a plummeting atomic bomb. Not even the Phantom Stranger can influence the outcome of this battle royale! Alan Grant and Val Semeiks are the creators of Demon #15, a July 25th release.

Raisin' Kane With Back to the Future

Harvey Comics, for quite a while a minor player in the comic book marketplace, has decided to call attention to itself in a big way: they've managed to latch on to some major licensed products, and they've called on some great comic book talent to bring those licensed products to the comic racks. This July, Gil Kane (who's already the regular artist on Harvey's Monster in My Pocket series) will lend his considerable artistic talents to Harvey's latest title, Back to the Future. Marty McFly, Doc Emmett Brown, his wife Clara, their kids Jules and Verne, Einstein, Jennifer Parker, Biff Tanner, and the ever-popular DeLorean (yes, it's back!) are all here in this comic book series that debuts just a matter of months before CBS' Saturday morning animated Back to the Future series. In the first issue of Back to the Future, Marty and Doc head back to 1927 Chicago--but how do they get back once they get there? You'll find out in July when Back to the Future #1 debuts, with scripts by Dwayne (Damage Control) McDuffie. And don't think this is the last of the big-name projects you'll see from Harvey Comics--later this fall, they have a Home Alone comic book ready to go!...

Batman Opposes Predator in late '91

A couple of weeks ago CSN gave readers the inside scoop on the upcoming Batman/Predator team-up. What was omitted due to a production error was the date of release. Batman/Predator brings the greatest hunter in the universe to Gotham City, where his prey is the greatest manhunter on Earth the Dark Knight Detective. Batman has certainly faced some challenging foes in his long comics history--but never before has he faced so worthy an adversary whose only goal was Batman's death.

Batman/Predator is written by Dave Gibbons, who wrote last year's World's Finest limited series for DC. The limited series will be illustrated by Andy and Adam Kubert, whose art brought last year's Adam Strange limited series to life. Diana Schutz (editor of Dark Horse's Predator projects) and Denny O'Neil (editor of the Batman titles) will co-edit this DC-Dark Horse joint venture. Look for it in late fall or early winter of this year -- and, as always, look to CSN for the latest updates and previews.

Dorman Litho Latest In Dark Horse Series

Dark Horse is continuing its series of high-quality lithographs with the scheduled release of a 1500-copy limited edition litho of Dave Dorman's stunning cover for Aliens Vs. Predator #4. To guarantee that fans get perfect copies of the print, Dark Horse is shrinkwrapping each print with an acid-free backing board, then placing it in a cardboard protective container. This litho, signed and numbered by Dave Dorman, is priced at $79.95. As with all specialty items of this sort, tell the folks at your local comic shop that you're interested--and be sure to let 'em know that you heard about it in CSN...

Night Raven's Dealing Out Justice In A House of Cards

Last year, Marvel gave American readers a chance to read the original Night Raven stories featuring artwork by V For Vendetta's David Lloyd in a reprint graphic novel. This June, readers will be able to enjoy an all-new Night Raven story, Night Raven: House of Cards; this is David Lloyd's first major new work in far too long a while. Night Raven is a vigilante who is carrying out a personal vendetta against mob crime in a Prohibition-era town; he's the sort of hero who seems more than a little familiar to readers of The Punisher, Nomad, The Spider, and other such crimesmashers. In Night Raven: House of Cards, writer Jamie Delano (who has quite a following thanks to his work on Hellblazer) and Lloyd tell of Night Raven's efforts to break organized crime's hold on the city, no matter what the cost. Night Raven: House of Cards, a full-color graphic novel priced at $14.95, is scheduled for June 13th release.

Warhammer 40K Is Heading For a Big Confrontation

The people at Games Workshop are building up things in Warhammer 40K--in fact, they're about to release a confrontation! The big new Warhammer 40K: Confrontation game is set to ship sometime in June from Games Workshop. The Confrontation Game will feature both board game and role-playing game aspects to it, as players are pitted in the midst of a gang/Hive World warfare scenario. This massive boxed game will retail for around $34.95.

Warhammer 40K players are getting a special treat in June, because the new Marine Codex Hardcover will also be shipping. This thick new supplement will feature new weapons, rules, vehicles, and powers. Sure to be a smash success with Warhammer fans, this supplement is tentatively priced at $24.95.

Ya Gotta Have Faith

"Faith," the three-part story by Mike Barr, Bart Sears, and Randy Elliott that debuts in Batman: Legends of the Dark Knight #21, explores the ramifications of vigilantism, touching on questions that may have never before been considered by Batman. In this storyline, John Ackers, whose life was saved by Batman, forms his own vigilante group in honor of the Dark Knight. At first, Batman condones their actions--but when a close friend of his condemns both the vigilante group and Batman, Bruce Wayne is forced to look again at the raison d'etre for his actions. The story begins on July 5th and continues through the summer.
